

How To Prove Who Is The At-Fault Party In A Car Accident?

Wednesday, November 16, 2022.

Who is at fault in a car accident in Georgia has a huge effect on the end settlement, as the other person involved often needs compensation for property damage and injuries. Georgia's car accident laws are fault-based, which means the person whose actions led to the collision will be responsible for compensating that individual.

That's why it's important to know how to figure out who is responsible for the accident, so you can get the compensation that's due to you. If you're ignorant of this, you could end up being falsely blamed for an accident and robbed of the compensation that is owed to you.

After being involved in a car accident, it is best to get help from an ATLINJ car accident attorney in Georgia. The other driver may even have to pay for the damage caused. That's why it's important to engage a car accident attorney who can help you determine the negligent driver and win compensation for your vehicle.

How To Prove Who Is The At-Fault Party In A Car Accident?

We have created a list of six simple ways of determining fault in the case of car accidents in the state of Georgia.

- Apparent Traffic Violations - One thing you want to prove when involved in a car accident is that the other party was negligent. It is easier to be proven liable if they violated any traffic laws or rules.
- Eyewitnesses
- Vehicular Damage - The condition and location of the vehicles involved in an accident can be used to figure out who caused it.
- Video Evidence - This form is more reliable than eyewitness testimony and is a more efficient way to gather information.
- The Police Report - The police have the resources to investigate, uncovering the cause of the accident.
